

June 2nd, 2017

To whom this may concern,

I've had the pleasure of working with Miss Waite as a student-teacher in her 10th grade English class (Science days). I have been a part of her class since late January. I have watched her take initiative action and engage the students in insightful discourse. I learned from her the basics of classroom management, and how to successfully occupy the students with the work at hand. The lesson of "Freedom", was a thoughtful topic and captured the student's creativity, as well as their voices. Her method of incorporating such themes into literary work helped me and my colleagues well prepare for future lessons of our own. She is well organized throughout her daily lesson plans. I've personally witnessed the growth of some of her students- academically and professionally. Miss Waite had tapped into their hidden potential; aside from writing several literary pieces, the students got the opportunity to be published in a book.

Sincerely,

Riyam Alwishah
College of Education, Wayne State University

A handwritten signature in cursive script, appearing to read "Riyam", written in black ink.